
[Authors]

Behrouz Alikhani completed his Master degree at the Teheran University in political sciences and his PhD at Leibniz University of Hanover in sociology and social psychology. Currently, he is a lecturer at the Institute of Sociology at the Westphalian Wilhelms-University in Muenster in Germany. His main research focus is on democratisation and de-democratisation processes in different structured societies.

Andrea Amico is a Ph.D. student in Social Sciences Methodology at Communication and Social Research Department, University of Rome “La Sapienza”. His main subjects of research are centred on the complex systems and university policies.

Sandra Annunziata is an urban scholar and planner. She has a PhD in Urban Policies, achieved at Department of Urban Studies at the Faculty of Architecture, Roma Tre University. She has been visiting scholar at Columbia and Cornell University and Post-Doctoral Researcher at Roma Tre University leading a research project called Urbanity and Conflict in the Neo-liberal City. Currently she is visitor critics at the Cornell in Rome program for the European Cities course and lecturer at Roma Tre University for the Laboratory of Urbanism. As post doc, is engaged in a research project on small villages and social cohesion.

Francesca Bianchi is Assistant professor in Sociology at the University of Siena, Department of Education, Humanities and Intercultural Communication (in Arezzo), where she teaches Sociology, Sociology of family and life course and Sociology of vocational training. She collaborated in several researches concerning social and cultural transformations: with ISFOL Rome, Carlo Cattaneo Institute of Bologna, MTI of Boston, Tuscany and Emilia Romagna Regions, the Provincial Administration of Pistoia. Her main research interests concerns social interaction and relationship between individuals and society, education, continuing vocational training and lifelong learning. She is member of the CAMBIO. Laboratorio sulle trasformazioni sociali, DSPS (Department of Social and Political Sciences), Università degli studi di Firenze.

Massimo Bressan, President of the Research Institute IRIS (Prato), is an anthropologist. He deals with social-research and evaluation consultancy and economic and territorial social planning. He taught Urban Cultural Anthropology at the Faculty of Political Science, Università degli Studi di Firenze.

Livia Brusaglioni (Ph.D. Methodology and Social Research) is Post-Doc research Fellow at the Department of Educational Science and Psychology. Her main research interests are social methodology with a particular focus on Grounded Theory and action-research. She is currently involved in action research projects on the topic of quality of housing for CIMESS (Interuniversity Centre for Methodology of Social Sciences, University of Florence). She is author of the book Grounded Theory. La teoria, il metodo, le tecniche published by Bonanno (2013).

Maria Elena Buslacchi is a PhD student in Anthropology at École des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales, Centre Norbert Elias de Marseille, France and Università degli Studi di Genova, Italy. Her main subject of studies is the relationship between cognitive representation of space and common usages: her study-cases are public spaces in two European Capitals of Culture, Genoa 2004 and Marseille 2013. Her research combines ethnographic, historical and geographical methodologies. She co-founded Laboratorio Permanente di Studi Urbani at DAFiSt, University of di Genoa. Recent publications: Bianco su nero. Una storia per strada in “Lo Squaderno – Explorations in Space and Society n. 27, pp. 47-50, marzo 2013; La città tra spazio e luogo. Uno studio sulle Chinatown europee. In "Lessico di Etica pubblica", vol. 3, p. 124-133, novembre 2012.

Mario Caciagli is professor emeritus of the University of Florence. He was full professor for Comparative Politics at the Faculty of Political Sciences from 1987 until 2010. He was before professor at the Faculty of Political Sciences of the University of Catania (1973-1984) and at the Faculty of Political Sciences of the University of Padua (1971-73 and 1984-1987). He was visiting professor in Barcelona and Santiago de Compostela, and also in Heidelberg, Bonn, Innsbruck and IEP of Paris. Since 1981 he's director of the Quaderni dell'Osservatorio elettorale, a half-early review on electoral studies.

Erika Cellini is assistant professor in Sociology at the University of Florence (Italy). Her main research interests are in Methodology of Social Sciences with a focus on the ethnographic approach. She is author of the book L'osservazione nelle scienze umane published by Franco Angeli (2008) and, with Barbara Saracino, of the paper Re(l)azioni popolari. Etnografia in un quartiere di edilizia residenziale pubblica in «Etnografia e Ricerca Qualitativa», 2 (2013).

Terry Nichols Clark is Professor of Sociology at the University of Chicago. He holds MA and PhD degrees from Columbia University, and has taught at Columbia, Harvard, Yale, the Sorbonne, University of Florence, and UCLA. He has worked on how cities use culture to transform themselves, esp. in books on The City as an Entertainment Machine, and Building Post-Industrial Chicago. He coordinates the Fiscal Austerity and Urban Innovation Project, surveying 1200 cities in the U.S. and 38 other countries. www.faii.org. Since 2004, he has focused on Scenes, comparing neighborhood cultures

Giampiero D'Alessandro is a Ph.D. student in Social Sciences Methodology at Communication and Social Research Department, University of Rome "La Sapienza". His current research interests are related to the study of student mobility besides new proposals for the use of social networks in social research.

Anna D'Ascenzio is PhD Candidate research with project in Identity and practices of social distinction through food consumption (XXVIII cycle) at University Suor Orsola Benincasa. She is an assistant professorship in general sociology and in social control. She is a member of the research group URiT (Research on social topographies Unit) directed by Prof. Antonello Petrillo.

Paolo Diana is researcher and assistant professor at the University of Salerno where he teaches and carries out research within the Department of Political, Social and Communication Sciences. He is professor of Methodology for the Social Sciences and Opinions and Attitudes Analysis (degree course in Sociology). His main research areas are: Analysis of the social condition in adolescence, the housing of immigrants and the development of e-learning teaching methods in the area of social exclusion. He is the author of numerous publications (refer to: <http://www.unisa.it/docenti/paolodiana/publicazioni>).

Annalisa Di Benedetto is a Ph.D. student in Social Sciences Methodology at Communication and Social Research Department, University of Rome "La Sapienza". Currently her main topic of interest is data quality in the evaluative research.

Stefanie Ernst completed her undergraduate degree in sociology, history and social anthropology at the University of Münster. She has taught sociology at the universities of Dortmund, Münster, Osnabrück, Graz, Copenhagen and Bloomington. She is currently professor of sociology at the Institute of Sociology at the University of Münster. She teaches at undergraduate and postgraduate levels; her research interests are varied including: the sociology of work, organization and gender; processes of transformation and the wider discipline of sociology more generally; social research methods, esp. process oriented methods. She is currently working on a book on Thinking in figurations: a knowledge sociological study about the next generation of Norbert Elias scholars.

John Goodwin is Reader in Sociology at the University of Leicester (UK). His research interests cover the sociology of work – especially the transition from education to work; gender and employment; the sociology of Norbert Elias, C. Wright Mills and Pearl Jephcott; and finally, the history of Sociology.

Béatrice Jacques teaches Sociology at the Department of Sociology, University of Bordeaux Segalen, and she is a researcher of the Laboratory-Centre Emile Durkheim UMR5116 in Bordeaux. Her works focus on reproductive health, access to care, the experience of illness, innovation and cancer. She directs a research for the National Institute of Cancer, The Oncologic Interventional Radiology: a Multidisciplinary Approach to Medical Innovation and Its Social Recognition (2012-2015). In particular, she published in 2007 Sociology of Childbirth (Presses Universitaires de France) and, more recently, The Entrance of the Men in Obstetrics: Getting Space in a Professional Hyper-Feminized World, in «Revue Française des Affaires Sociales» (2 -3, 2012).

Elizabeth L. Krause is professor in the Department of Anthropology at the University of Massachusetts Amherst and, during 2013–14, a Fellow at the National Humanities Center in Research Triangle Park, North Carolina.

Monica Musolino holds a PhD in Theories of Political, Social and Communicative Institutions. She is currently carrying out a post doctorate in Sociology of economic and labor (University of Messina - Dept. S.U.S. Human and Social Sciences). Her research interests include urban and behavioural changes, new forms of sustainable cohabitation and cohousing, morphological approach to the reality learning, collective memory.

Gary W. McDonogh is Professor of urban anthropology at Bryn Mawr College, Philadelphia. Over the last few decades, he has explored many cities worldwide through perspectives drawn from anthropology, geography, social history, planning and mass media/cultural studies. This intimate knowledge of cities in turn provides foundations for teaching classes thematic courses on urban social and cultural issues and classes that guide students into comparative exploration of urbanism. Barcelona, Spain, has been the cornerstones of his work since the mid-1970s, in works as diverse as the monograph Good Families Of Barcelona (Princeton, 1986), the edited volume Conflict In Catalonia: Images Of An Urban Society (Florida, 1986) and Twelve Walks Through The History Of Barcelona (Ajuntament de Barcelona, 1993) as well as numerous other articles in Spanish, French, Catalan and English.

Lidia K.C. Manzo is a PhD Candidate in Sociology and Social Research at the University of Trento, Italy. She holds a MA in Political and Social Communication from the University of Milan where she performed ethnographic research and a documentary on Milan's Chinatown. As a Visiting Researcher at The City University of New York she has conducted field and other research on the 40-years process of gentrification of a Brooklyn neighborhood. Currently, Manzo is the Italian principal investigator for the project on the meaning and use of the home as both a social and market good in the international research "Houwel" coordinated by Richard Ronald at the University of Amsterdam.

Enrico Nerli Ballati is a Ph.D. student in Social Sciences Methodology at Communication and Social Research Department, University of Rome "La Sapienza". His current research areas focus on: Italian youth population not in employment, education or training (Neet), youth transition to adulthood, spread of deviant behavior among adolescents and agent-based social simulation.

Manuela Porcu is Post-Doc fellow at the Department of Law, University of Cagliari. She has a Ph. D. in Compared Social Research from the Department of Social Science, University of Turin. Her research interests include: gated communities and private urban governance. She is co-autor of Crisi di una città. Savona tra la fine dell'industria e il neoliberalismo (2013) and Sardegna tra resistenze e rinunce (2013).

Barbara Saracino (Ph.D. Methodology and Social Research) is Post-Doc research Fellow at the Department of Social and Political Sciences in Florence. Her main research interests deal with social methodology and sociology of science. She is author with Erika Cellini of the paper Re(l)azioni popolari. Etnografia in un quartiere di edilizia residenziale pubblica in «Etnografia e Ricerca Qualitativa», 2 (2013). She has edited with Giuseppe Pellegrini Donne e Scienza. L'Italia e il contesto internazionale (Observa, 2013) and with Massimiano Bucchi Annuario Scienza Tecnologia e Società 2014. Edizione speciale. Dieci anni di scienza nella società (Il Mulino).

Anurag Sharma is associate professor in the School of Management at the University of Massachusetts Amherst. He is a member of the Amherst Town Meeting and serves on the town's Finance Committee.

Renate Siebert, after completing her studies at the Institut für Sozialforschung in Frankfurt under the supervision of Th. W. Adorno, and after working there as research assistant for one year, taught sociology in a number of Italian universities until retirement. She spent most of her career at the University of Calabria, where she is still a member of the Interdepartmental Centre for Women's Studies. She has published widely, both nationally and internationally, on racism and ethnic prejudice, on gender and generational differences in Southern Italy, on mafia and violence, and on the role of women in mafia.

Eleonora Vlach is currently a doctoral student at the University of Trento where she also obtained her M.A. in Environment, Territory and Society. Her research interests lie in the field of Urban and Rural Sociology, Sociology of Local Communities and the Environment. In addition to the study of urban transformation, her current research projects include the analysis of social inequalities in relation to ethnicity and the impact of planning decisions on the sustainable development of mountain areas.

Cindy Wong is professor of media culture at College of Staten Island, New York. She has worked on domestic and global issues within an interdisciplinary framework that draws on communications, media studies, anthropology, cultural studies, and documentary production. Professor Wong teaches classes on Global Media, Multicultural Literacies, Media and the Margins, and the Peopling of New York. Professor Wong is the co-editor of the Encyclopedia of Contemporary American Culture (Routledge 2000; new edition for 2008). She is also co-author of Global Hong Kong (Routledge, 2005). She has published numerous articles and books chapter on grassroots media, media consumption, identity and urbanism, film festivals, Hong Kong cinema, and diasporic Chinese Satellite TV. She is currently researching and writing on world Film Festivals and exploring Global Chinatowns.